

KEY HEADLINES:

- The markets remain on edge. US-China tensions are escalating. Strained Brexit talks are set to resume today. Profit-taking in the tech space has continued. The ECB meeting is around the corner. The MSCI Asia Pacific Index snapped a three-day slide today with most markets moving higher, led by a 1% gain in Australia. European bourses are mostly lower, and the Dow Jones Stoxx 600 is giving back more than half of yesterday's 1.6% gain. US shares have fallen throughout the European morning. Benchmark 10-year yields are 2-3 bp lower, leaving the US yield near 68 bp.
- GBPUSD has reversed back down again after finding resistance at the eight-and-a-half-month high of 1.3487 achieved last week. The momentum indicators are pointing to a neutral to negative bias in the short term with the RSI holding near the 50 level and the MACD oscillator falling below the trigger line in the positive zone. Moreover, the price declined below the 20-day simple moving average (SMA) and is heading towards the five-month ascending trend line.
- Jobs Report Bolsters Greenback, But For How Long? The US Index managed to close up 0.25% towards the 93 handle yesterday. However, demand for the greenback seems to be fading from the start of the week. After hitting a weekly peak last Friday on the back of the US jobs report, the US index has shown some signs of exhaustion. The dovish stance the Fed is adopting with fiscal stimulus talks could keep the pressure on the dollar. Added to that the ongoing coronavirus pandemic and the political uncertainty ahead of the US Presidential elections could weigh further.
