

KEY HEADLINES:

The Indian rupee ended flat on Monday, while its Asian counterparts dropped on recession fears, as the Reserve Bank of India's likely intervention continued supporting the local currency.

The partially convertible rupee closed unchanged at 82.35 per dollar, having traded in an extremely narrow six paisa range all session. The RBI was likely selling dollars and receiving forwards through state-run banks as the central bank tries to keep the currency around 82.40 levels.

The forwards market had been quite "volatile," as the USD/INR 1-year forward implied yield dropped to 2.45%, its lowest since November 2011, from 2.55% on Friday.

Retail inflation is set to ease from September levels, while economic activity is poised to expand, the Reserve Bank of India said in its monthly bulletin published today.

India's foreign exchange reserves rose for the first time in two months in the week ended Oct. 7, increasing by $204 million over the period to $532.87 billion. Reserves were still down 17% compared to its peak of $642.5 billion last year.
