

KEY HEADLINES:

The Indian rupee closed little changed against the U.S. dollar on Tuesday, as strong demand for dollars from oil companies and other importers prompted the local unit to surrender earlier gains.

The rupee closed at 82.36 per dollar, compared with 82.3500 in the previous session. The local unit hit a one-and-half-week high of 82.0350 earlier in the session, before giving up the gains due to the dollar demand from oil refiners and other importers looking to hedge near-term payments. Rupee forward premiums inched higher, with the 1-year implied yield recovering from 11-year lows.

The U.S. dollar edged higher against a basket of currencies on Tuesday, shaking off some of the weakness of the previous session, but a revival in risk appetite in global financial markets kept a lid on its gains.

The Bank of England said on Tuesday it would go ahead with plans to start selling some of its huge stock of government bonds with the first sale due on Nov. 1, a day later than previously planned to avoid clashing with a government fiscal statement.

Meanwhile the Japanese yen traded near a 32-year trough to the dollar at 149 yen, putting the major psychological barrier of 150 in focus and raising the possibility of the Bank of Japan doing more to support the battered currency after its first yen-buying intervention since 1998 on Sept. 22.
